Substitute at Palmyra

In Palmyra on October 17, 1862, during the war an informer in the town disappeared and the commander in charge, ordered ten men to be shot in reprisal.

Several men were being detained in Palmyra jail as prisoners of war at that time, and ten men were selected from among them. Of this number, one was Wm. T. Humphrey, the father of several children, whose wife pleaded for his release. Because of her physical condition and because Humphrey was the father of several children, the commanding officer struck his name off, and substituted the name of Hiram Smith, a young man without a family. Smith gave his consent and stated that perhaps it were better for a single man to die than a man with a family.

At Mt. Pleasant Church cemetery in Mt. Salem Association is a stone erected with an inscription which reads:

“This monument is dedicated to the memory of Hiram Smith. The hero that sleeps beneath the sod here Who was shot at Palmyra, October 17, 1862 as a substitute for Wm. T. Humphrey, my father. - G.W. Humphrey.”

Switch at Auschwitz

In October, 1972, a crowd of 150,000 Europeans gathered between the barracks and crematories of the Auschwitz extermination camp to honor a man who gave his life to save a fellow prisoner. The martyr was Pastor Maximillian Kolbe, who stepped forward to take the place of Sgt. Franciszek Gajowniczek. It happened in July, 1941.

Gajowniczek had been selected at random by Nazi guards to die.

When the victim pleaded for his life, so that he might see his wife and children, the minister stepped forward and offered to take the doomed man's place. Pastor Kolbe told the guards that he was alone in the world and would be willing to die instead of the sergeant. A few weeks later, Pastor Kolbe died from starvation and a dose of carbolic acid.

Gajowniczek survived the rigors of Auschwitz and was reunited with his loved ones at the end of the war. At the 1972 ceremonies he spoke with moving simplicity. He said he wanted to express his thanks for the gift of life he received, and wanted to honor Pastor Kolbe for his heroic sacrifice.
